BUILDINGS: Community Issues

Urban planning is the design and planning process BEFORE construction. It is important because it encourages the designers and developers to think very carefully about the type, purpose and location of the project before starting work. Without this process, communities and buildings might be unusable because of their location or design (would you go to a park located next to a landfill?) Use fact sheet 2.2 Buildings - Community Issues to help you with these activities.

Activity

Think about the urban planning of your community. List all the points that work well and why, and also those that could be improved to benefit the community. For everything that you list as needing improvement, suggest a way that the design could be changed.

THE URBAN PLANNING OF MY COMMUNITY
What works well?	Why?
What doesn't work well?	How it could be improved?

Provided by Nationwide - available on www.NationwideEducation.co.uk